

The Streets to Stability Project

Helping People Take the Next Step

The Streets to Stability Project is being built to help people who are homeless, close to becoming homeless, coming out of recovery, looking for work, or trying to get their life steady again.

Many people want to move forward, but they do not always know where to go first. Some need a safe place to stay. Some need recovery help. Some need a job. Some need a ride. Some need food, clothes, or help getting important papers. Many need more than one of these things at the same time.

Our goal is to help people find the right next step and connect them with people and places that can help.

Why This Matters

When someone is struggling, it can be hard to know where to start.

A person may want a job, but they may not have a ride.

A person may need a place to live, but they may need recovery help first.

A person may want to work, but they may not have the papers they need.

A person may need food today, but they also need a plan for tomorrow.

When these needs are not connected, people can get stuck. The Streets to Stability Project wants to help connect the pieces so people do not have to figure it out alone.

How We Want To Help

We want to listen to each person's situation and help find the best next step.

That may mean helping connect someone to:

Housing help

Recovery support

Sober living

A job or job training

Food and basic needs

Transportation

Help with important documents

Medical or mental health resources

Other trusted community support

We are not trying to do everything by ourselves. We want to work with churches, recovery centers, housing programs, employers, food programs, transportation groups, and other organizations that already help people.

Working Together

The Streets to Stability Project is being built around teamwork.

Many good organizations already serve people in need. We want to help bring those connections together so people can find help faster and with more support.

We are looking for partners who may be willing to help in simple and practical ways. Some partners may be able to accept referrals. Some may be able to offer food, clothing, rides, work opportunities, recovery support, housing options, or other help. Some may simply be able to point us toward the right person or organization.

Every connection matters.

What We Are Asking

Right now, we are asking churches, businesses, nonprofits, recovery programs, housing groups, and community leaders to learn about the mission and consider being part of the support network.

We are asking potential partners to let us know:

- What kind of help they offer
- Who we should contact
- How referrals should be made
- What requirements they have
- What limits they may have
- Whether they are open to working with us in the future

This helps us build a clear list of trusted places we can contact when someone needs help.

Why Written Support Helps

A simple written agreement or email from a partner helps us stay organized. It helps us know who is willing to help, what they can offer, and how we should contact them.

Written support also helps show that this project is being built with real community connections. It helps us explain the mission to future donors, churches, businesses, and grant organizations.

The goal is not to pressure anyone. The goal is to build clear, honest, and helpful relationships.

What We Are Doing Now

Right now, we are building the foundation of the project.

We are organizing the board, preparing the nonprofit documents, building a list of possible partners, and starting conversations with people who may want to help.

Before we serve people on a larger scale, we want to make sure we have a clear plan, trusted partners, and a strong support system in place.

Our Larger Goal

Our larger goal is to one day build facilities that help with the biggest problems people face when trying to rebuild their lives: housing, training, transportation, and support.

In the future, we want The Streets to Stability Project to have places where people can live safely while they work on getting stable. These facilities would not just be a place to sleep. They would be built to help people move forward.

The goal would be to provide housing support, job training, life skills, recovery connections, transportation help, and guidance in one connected place. This would help people work on several needs at the same time instead of being sent from place to place with no clear path.

We know this is a larger goal that will take time, planning, funding, and strong community support. That is why we are starting by building the foundation first. We want to build trusted partnerships now, learn where the biggest needs are, and grow in a responsible way.

The Streets to Stability Project believes that people need more than a quick handout. Many people need a safe place, a clear plan, good support, and a real chance to rebuild.

Our mission is simple:

Help people find the right next step, connect them with the right support, and walk with them toward stability.
